Monthly Comment

Major central banks have been cautious in July. The US Federal Reserve kept its key rates unchanged at 4.25%-4.50%, highlighting a moderate slowdown in the economy (Q2 growth at 3% year-on-year) and inflation still above target (core US PCE price index at 3% in June). Jerome Powell emphasized uncertainties – including inflationary pressures linked to the Trump administration's trade policies – to justify this pause, despite unemployment close to its historic lows at 4.1%. The European Central Bank also left its rates unchanged (deposit rate at 2%). Inflation in the eurozone has returned to around 2% and growth remains resilient. Furthermore, the negotiation of a trade agreement with Washington has removed a significant short-term risk for the European economy. Similarly, the Bank of Japan kept its short-term rate at 0.50% but raised its inflation projections (2.7% for the current fiscal year), a sign of increased confidence in achieving its 2% target. It does not rule out a rate hike by the end of 2025, especially as a US-Japan trade agreement reducing tariffs on Japanese cars is brightening the outlook for the Japanese economy. On the geopolitical front, the 90-day truce agreed in May between the US and China remains in place, while Washington has announced new 25% tariffs on Indian imports and put pressure on Brazil. Although this targeted escalation maintains uncertainty, the absence of other major tensions has prevented a confidence shock on the markets at this stage. As a result, the US 10-year yield closed at 4.37% (+14 basis points), the German 10-year Bund at 2.69% (+7 basis points) and the Japanese 10-year yield climbed to 1.55% (+12 basis points) as yield curve control was eased. European credit spreads tightened (-15 basis points for cash Investment Grade) to return to their lowest levels seen in 2021.

The ELEVA Global Bonds Opportunities fund posted a positive performance in July. Its directional portfolio was driven by the performance of credit, emerging markets and inflation break-evens, which cushioned the rise in yields. Unsurprisingly, long positions in USD and GBP duration underperformed, while short positions in CAD and JPY duration contributed positively. The short position in Japanese duration and long exposure in Europe were reduced. The credit allocation is kept close to neutral, including the CDS protection. In the arbitrage pocket, positions on the yield curve steepening were slightly reduced and contributed positively over the month. Exposure to BRL was hedged following the announcement of significant tariffs by Mr. Trump.
