Monthly Comment

In addition to the trade war, Israeli and US attacks on Iranian military and nuclear sites have taken investors' attention. While visibility remains low, the absence of an escalation of the conflict and the preservation, at this stage, of Iran's oil production capacity have allowed risky assets to remain resilient. After peaking at close to USD 80/bbl, Brent crude prices quickly retraced to their three-month average. With regard to tariffs, the situation appears to be easing, with tariffs on Chinese imports to the US returning to 30%. The country's economic slowdown is continuing very gradually (decline in the ISM manufacturing index, fall in job creation). Inflation has risen less than expected, with the PCE inflation rate at 2.1%, as have service prices, in line with wage increases. While this development could have justified a cut in key rates, the Fed preferred to opt for patience, giving itself time to analyze the consequences of the Trump administration's policies. As expected, the ECB once again lowered its rate to 2% and indicated that it was now in "a good position to address the uncertainties ahead." The SNB lowered its rate to 0% with inflation entering negative territory in May at -0.1% year-on-year. Rate desynchronization is setting in. Ten-year sovereign rates in the US, the UK, and Japan fell by 17 basis points (4.23%), 16 basis points (4.49%) and 4 basis points (1.44%), while in Germany it rose by 11 basis points (2.61%), penalized by financing requirements linked to military spending. The credit market remained buoyant, with cash credit spreads tightening by 8 basis points (92 basis points) for investment grade and 13 basis points (320 basis points) for high yield. Emerging markets also performed well, supported by the weakening US dollar.

The ELEVA Euro Bonds Strategies fund posted positive performance in absolute and relative terms compared to its benchmark index, mainly thanks to its Romanian exposure and credit selection. At this stage, the CDS hedge used to neutralize the credit allocation is being maintained. A long break-even inflation position in the eurozone was initiated at the start of the attack on Iran.
